

From: New Knowledge 6 (22): 999, October 1965

Below: When blood groups match, the plasma and red cells blend smoothly (top). But when the groups are incompatible, the red cells stick together in visible clumps (bottom) that can clog up tiny blood vessels. These cells have been stained for easier identification

Brian J. Ford

